A Chance for Change: Empowerment & Restoration

Today, the Erasmus+ funded project “A Chance for Change” launches its new website focusing on addressing gender based violence through restorative justice

The website www.achance4change.eu will bring together the work of the Erasmus partnership coordinated by the Restorative Justice for All International Institute and under the direction of its Founder Professor Theo Gavrielides.

After our first successful Transnational Project Meeting in Kilikis at the end of September (premises of the Greek Partner Epimorfotiki) where all partners from “Chance for Change” (C4C) discussed multiple and innovative ideas under Erasmus+ funding, we established the parameters for the communication and dissemination of the information. We have carefully designed this platform to serve as the project digital hub for all on-going activities and results for the duration of the implementation of the project and afterwards.

At the same time, the Facebook page has been launched and the hashtag #chance4change may be used to refer to the project material via social media.

Desiree Noriega, RJ4All youth project officer said: “The way to increase our visibility among young people is by appearing in social media platforms. I believe this is a great first step to target young people and to let them know our aims and goals”

Samuel Underwood, member of the Youth Management Board said: “It’s very exciting to be here at the inception of a project whose outcomes will be so wide-ranging and beneficial. I’m thrilled to be working alongside RJ4All to help evaluating the outcomes of Chance4Change.”

Theo Mavrosavva, OTI International Projects Manager and Project’s Communication Officer said: “Finally we are digitally visible! And everyone can be informed and use our site and social media channels to get updated of what’s going on with C4C! The integration of the e-courses that will be created along with RJ4All’s experience in the field will benefit everyone.”
